

Weekly Market Dashboard: July 5, 2024

Market Overview

Regaining Traction

The major U.S. equity indices finished the week in positive territory, with the Nasdaq and S&P 500 gaining 3.5% and 2.0% respectively, notching higher record levels, while the Dow added 0.7%. For the Nasdaq, this was the tenth positive week out of the past eleven.

Narrow, Cooling Growth

The U.S. labor market added 206,000 new jobs in June, besting expectations but revealing a narrow growth picture. The majority of additions were largely driven by three categories, while several others saw zero or shrinking employment change. April and May's labor numbers were also downwardly revised by a collective 111,000 jobs. Meanwhile, the U.S. unemployment rate ticked higher for the third straight month, rising to 4.1% – the highest level since November 2021.

Beyond the Minutes

Minutes from the FOMC's June meeting indicated that while inflation is moving in the right direction, its progress has not been significant enough to justify rate cuts from the Fed. Participants emphasized that lowering the Fed Funds target range would not be appropriate until further information emerged to give them greater confidence that inflation was moving sustainably toward the Committee's 2% objective.

Oil Rush

The price of U.S. crude oil climbed for the fourth straight week, reaching as high as $84 per barrel intra-week before closing Friday at over $83, marking its highest level in over two months.
